Operator revived passenger who stopped breathing

Operator Barry Page was driving on Hastings Street when a passenger collapsed. Barry, who had taken the Safety Oriented First Aid (SOFA) course offered to all Metro Transit operators, turned the passenger on his side and checked his breathing and pulse. Finding neither, Barry turned the man on his back, asked a passenger to call for help, and started mouth-to-mouth resuscitation. The man started breathing and then stopped. Once again Barry applied mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and this time the man started breathing regularly, his pulse became stronger, and he regained consciousness.

A few minutes later an ambulance arrived, and happily, the man has fully recovered.

Our congratulations to Barry on the calm and competent manner in which he handled this emergency.
