

The Buzzer

Please think twice before using a courtesy seat

BC Transit has designated seats on all buses and SkyTrain cars as "Courtesy Seats". They're close to the doors and they're meant for the use of the elderly and those who are physically handicapped.

Most passengers are happy to cooperate because they recognize the need for such seats. A few obviously haven't thought it through or are forgetful. To them we say, please think twice.

30 days in jail for half a dollar

When a man deposited a folded dollar bill in the fare box of a bus, the operator suspected it was half of a dollar bill and stopped the first Vancouver policeman he saw.

After an investigation, the man was charged with Obtaining Transportation by Fraud. He pleaded Guilty in Vancouver Provincial Court and was sentenced to 30 days in jail.

Underground access to downtown SkyTrain stations

An underground walkway now connects Burrard Station with Bentall Centre, offering passengers an alternative means of entering and leaving the station.

The walkway, lined with shops and services, leads to the station's fare machine level. The two fare-paid zones are on lower levels. Plans are underway for similar walkways to connect the station with the Royal Centre and Park Place.

The Granville Station is connected to The Bay basement by a store-lined walkway. The station can also be accessed directly from the store's Seymour Street entrance.

An underground walkway connects the northwest corner of Dunsmuir and Beatty with Stadium Station's underground concourse and the fare machine and fare-paid zones.

An underground walkway connecting the Waterfront Station with the newly restored Sinclair Centre will be open to commuters from February 20 until EXPO opens. After EXPO the walkway will re-open for general use. The Sinclair Centre, a federal government complex which includes the former main post office, provides access to Granville, Hastings and Howe Streets.
