Spring Service Changes EFFECTIVE APRIL 12

TransLink

Greater local control the aim of ownership switch

April 1 marks a big day for the transit system in the Greater Vancouver region.

That's the day TransLink (formerly the Greater Vancouver Transportation Authority) officially takes responsibility for meeting the public's needs.

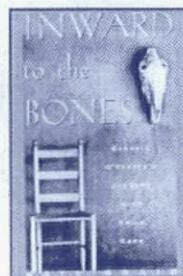

In an agreement confirmed by legislation last summer, the Province of B.C. has transferred control of BC Transit, WCE, SkyTrain, SeaBus, handyDART and some major roads and bridges in the Greater Vancouver Regional District to TransLink. TransLink gets some revenue directly from the Province, some from gas taxes and other levies. TransLink is governed by a board of 15 directors, including 12 mayors or GVRD directors and three provincial cabinet ministers or members of the Legislative Assembly.

Coast Mountain BusLink

is the newly named bus operating subsidiary of TransLink, which will encompass all bus, trolley bus and SeaBus services in the Greater Vancouver region (excluding the West Vancouver "Blue Bus" system). The name was selected by the TransLink

Poetry in Transit

A project to celebrate BC poets published in Canada

UNTITLED POEM (#65) reprinted with permission from: Inward to the Bones: Georgia O'Keeffe's Journey with Emily Carr by Kate Braid, © 1998, Polestar Book Publishers.

Project sponsors, BC Transit and the Association of Book Publishers of BC; with funding from The Canada Council for the Arts and Chapters.

Poetry

from INWARD TO THE BONES:
GEORGIA O'KEEFFE'S JOURNEY WITH EMILY CARR
If I were a singer, I would sing in an ocean choir where the scene overhead hums fog,
the cry of gulls, eagle mew.

Here is a baseline beat of breakers, melody of waves running glissando to my feet.
Deadheads float like dark notes
scribed on green ledger-lines of sea.
Pebbles in the sand whisper grace notes, ready and Emily's world is as hushed as the moment when the conductor raises her arms and motions us all to begin.

- Kate Braid

The League of Canadian Poets First Annual Canadian Poetry Month

Throughout April, poetry will be seen, heard, felt, tasted and savoured at locations throughout the country. Libraries will be playing host to displays of the archival material of well known Canadian poets, and readings will be the accompaniment. Bookstores will also be hotbeds of activity. The following poets who have been featured in Poetry in Transit are among those giving readings.

Gregory Scofield, Apr 11, 2 pm at Coquitlam Public Library,

- 3001 Burlington. • Apr 26, 7:30 pm at Vancouver Public Library, Central Branch.
- Susan Musgrave, Apr 18, 2 pm at Coquitlam Public Library, 575 Poirier. • Apr 22, 7:30 pm at Richmond Public Library, 11688 Steveston Hwy.
- Thuong Vuong Riddick, Apr 8, 7:30 pm at Richmond Art Gallery.
- George McWhirter, Apr 25, 8 pm at Bukowski's Bar & Bistro, 1447 Commercial Drive.
- Kate Braid, Apr 20, 7:30 pm at Women in Print, 3566 West 4th Ave, Vancouver.

Board of Directors from some 400 names proposed by transit employees and over 2,100 public entries. The employee and public entries were reviewed by a seven-member volunteer panel which submitted a short list to the TransLink Board for final selection.

"The Board - and the panel before it - had to consider several factors in selecting a name," said TransLink chair, George Puil. Not only does it have to describe the service, it needs to provide a geographic context. Furthermore, the name must work well as a corporate identity and offer market branding opportunities as well. We're satisfied that the new name does all that, and we would like to thank everyone who proposed a name and the panel for assessing the hundreds of submissions."

The volunteer panel was comprised of three transit employees, two representatives of transportation/environmental advocacy groups and two representatives of news organizations.

(Confirmation of the new name is subject to legal search)
